OPTIONAL

Please provide a brief bio for the Election Candidates webpage (500 words)

My name is Amanda Quash, and I'm originally from Telegraph Creek. My Tahltan name is Tache', and I belong to the Chi'yone clan. My mother is Lena Sharko (Quash), and my stepfather is Blaine Sharko. My maternal grandparents are the late Josephine Quash and Vernon Carlick, and my paternal grandfather is William Bob.

Today, I live in Prince George, BC, where I work for School District 57 as an Indigenous Education Worker. I'm also a proud mother to a vibrant 17-year-old daughter whose dedication to competitive soccer keeps both of us on our toes year-round. Her passion inspires me every day and fuels my commitment to supporting other youth as they pursue their own dreams.

Growing up in Telegraph Creek, I spent much of my time at my grandparents' house. My late grandfather, Willie Bob, played a significant role in shaping who I am. Before I could head outside to play, he would sit me down and speak to me about the importance of Native politics. You could say I was introduced to leadership at a very young age. My Grandpa Willie was one of the founders of the Tahltan Tribal Council, and political engagement was a constant presence in my upbringing.

Leadership has always been in my blood. In fact, my late great-great-great-grandfather, Nannock Charlie Quash, was the last hereditary chief of the Tahltan Nation. I carry that legacy with pride and purpose in all that I do.
